

Has Illegal Immigration Spawned Out of Control?

Gerald J. Kubicki's Novel, "A Dubious Terrain," Uses Fiction to Address an Important Issue

There are currently 12 million illegal aliens living in the United States, which has become a growing concern for many Americans. In his new novel, A Dubious Terrain, the fourth installment in the Dubious Mystery series, author Gerald J. Kubicki includes many real facts about illegal aliens in his fictional story, using fiction to highlight the hot-button issue.

The characters discuss the cost of illegal immigrants, illuminating how serious the problem is and how far out of hand it has gotten. One explains that many of them work illegally and send the money earned home to their families in Mexico, paying no taxes before doing so because they are paid off the books. He goes on to explain that many of them have fathered children who have become a burden to society, as we are required by law to feed them, give them an education, and give them medical support.

One scene in particular highlights how out of hand the problem has gotten and how few consequences there are for illegals. Danta Lopez announces the formation of a new fighting association, the Latino Domination Association, proclaiming that "All of our fighters are former gang members who have fought on the streets. They are all illegal aliens, their style will be ruthless, bare knuckled, and with no holds barred." James, a junior reporter, becomes interested, noting that while he "knew that the illegal alien issue had become ridiculous since America could not stem the flow coming into the country," but telling the media that his fighters were illegal "seemed a little too bold."

Kubicki addresses this and other timely issues like race relations, corruption, and the power of Homeland Security through fiction, interweaving them in his pulse-racing plot. Readers will inevitably be left anxious for the next two installments in the Dubious Mystery series: A Dubious Plan and A Dubious Artifact.

Gerald J. Kubicki

Gerald J. Kubicki considers himself “an average guy who can write.” He was born and raised on Eastern Long Island in the Westhampton area, attended college at SUNY Plattsburgh, and moved to New York City, where he was hired by a major manufacturer of food products that trained him how to be an executive, to believe that anything is possible, and exposed him to the broader world. As an executive, consultant, and founder of an English language school in China, Kubicki traveled all over the world, which is reflected in his books.

He currently lives in Las Vegas, the setting of A Dubious Terrain. Although Kubicki did not start writing until late in life, he is already a prolific author; he writes a new novel every three months, spending one month researching, one month writing, and one month golfing before starting the next novel.

The Dubious Mystery Series

The Dubious Mystery Series centers on protagonist Colton Banyon, an “average guy” who loves history, has a weakness for beautiful women, and is good at solving mysteries. Readers were first introduced to Banyon in A Dubious Mission; he has returned for three more mystery adventures: A Dubious Secret, A Dubious Dream, and A Dubious Terrain.
